Farmer Tami Purdue trained as an accountant and has a 20-year track record with a very successful law firm in the Triangle. Her "foodie" journey led her from rapt engagement with entertainment cooking, to organic gardening, to the start of the Sweet Pea Urban Garden in Raleigh.

Farmer Tami believes that urban farming is fundamental to the creation of healthy, sustainable food production for our growing metropolitan society. Sweet Peas Urban Gardens has emerged to be one of the most successful pioneers of this transition in the Triangle. Started on her own residential property, Sweet Peas Urban Gardens stays true to the name; this urban farm is located less than 2 miles from downtown Raleigh.

What's Growing?

The team at Sweet Pea Urban Garden grows over 55 varieties of microgreens and vegetable shoots.

These are a few examples of the microgreens available: sweet pea shoots, sunflower shoots, broccoli, salad mix, spicy mix, micro cilantro, wheat-grass, red garnet amaranth, garlic and onion chives.

Buying from Sweet Peas Urban Gardens

Child care facilities may purchase produce directly from Farmer Tami Purdue; she will deliver in Downtown Raleigh area. Farmer Tami also sells her products at The Saturday Market at Rebus Works in Raleigh's Boylan Heights and through The Produce Box.
